Penwortham Girls' High School Receives Prestigious UNICEF UK Award

Penwortham Girls' High School is to be awarded the Silver Rights Respecting School Award by UNICEF UK and is the first secondary school in Lancashire to achieve it.

UNICEF is the world's leading organisation working for children and their rights.

The Rights Respecting School Award is granted to schools that show commitment to promoting and realising children's rights and encouraging adults, children and young people to respect the rights of others in school. Silver is given to schools that make excellent progress towards embedding the principles of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child into its ethos and curriculum. There are over 1200 schools across England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales that have achieved Silver and over 500 schools that have been awarded Gold. Gold is the next step up and highest accolade granted by UNICEF UK.

Sharon Hall, Deputy Headteacher said, "We are very proud to have gained the Silver Rights Respecting Schools Award which recognises the hard work the students, staff and the wider community have put into learning about the rights that our students enjoy. The RRSA has a positive impact on students and the school as a whole. It has encouraged discussion, helping students to articulate their views and ensuring they learn about the experiences of children around the world."

The Award recognises achievement in putting the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child at the heart of a school's planning, policies and practice. A Rights Respecting School is a community where children's rights are learned, taught, practised, respected, protected and promoted.

How Penwortham Girls' High School put apprenticeships at the heart of their careers programme

Case Study

How one school put apprenticeships at the heart of their careers programme

John Ramsdale is the Senior Assistant Headteacher at Penwortham Girls' High School in Lancashire. He leads on their careers programme and has put apprenticeships at the heart of their offer to students.

We didn't just want to talk about apprenticeships and then leave it at that.

"The problem we have at Penwortham is we're surrounded by exceptional sixth form colleges. Some of the best sixth forms in the country are on our doorstep, providing genuinely incredible academic courses for our young people. For many years that meant young people would go down that pathway as standard."

John knew this was a problem. Not only were students not knowing enough about alternative routes, but the school also started to see an increase in the number of their former students dropping out of sixth form.

"Apprenticeships at our school have moved from something people are dimly aware of to having complete parity of esteem. We've moved from 3% of our students going down an apprenticeship route in 2019 to 10% in 2020. But more than that, 100% of our students now go on to a positive, sustained destination after they leave us."

John, alongside the school's Careers Adviser, took a three-part approach to driving up excitement about apprenticeships.

First, they wanted universal knowledge about apprenticeships among their students. John said: "We took an incredibly activist approach. We carpet bombed Year 10 and Year 11 students with information about what apprenticeships were, how they apply, stories of ex-students, and information about employers who offered them. All year groups had assemblies focused on them.

We had careers days where the whole school downed tools and focused on future careers, which included hearing directly from former students who were now apprentices, as well as other businesses who might recruit them."

Second, they increased the support available to students when they apply for an apprenticeship. "We didn't just want to talk about apprenticeships and then leave it at that. Whenever a local employer is recruiting an apprentice, we contact the target year group, inform their parents, and invite them to come in and discuss it with us. We help them with the application, answer questions about what it means for their education and provide as much guidance as possible."

Third, they personalise their careers programme to help those who need additional support. "I regularly meet our Heads of Year, our pupil premium coordinator and our Careers Adviser to identify which students might need additional careers support. They might need more of a hand to hold, more tailored advice and support, or more one-to-one work with their parents. Ultimately we want every one of our young people to go down the right path for them, whatever it might be."

For John, while these are some of the key ways he has driven up apprenticeship applications, they aren't the only way. "We run CPD for staff. We bring in ex-students and our network of parents, particularly those who work in industries that employ apprentices. During lockdown we ran drop-in sessions and lunchtime workshops."

When asked what his key advice is for other schools who want to drive up awareness and applications for apprenticeships, John said "make as many contacts with both apprenticeship providers and those who have gone down the apprenticeship route, and then use them strategically as part of your careers programme."
